IV. Explanation

A tireless Chinatown civic leader, Leonard M. Louie (1934 - 2013) devoted his life to his community and most notably to making Ping Tom Memorial Park and its field house a reality. Born in a small village in China, Louie immigrated to America with his family as a young child. They settled in Chicago's Chinatown community and he attended private and public schools. He graduated from the University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign with a degree in electrical engineering.

Louie became active in community affairs in Chinatown in the late 1950s. Later, he served on the Chinese American Service League, board of the Chinatown Museum, as well as member and two term president of the Chinese American Civic Council of Chicago. He was one of four founding members of the Chinese American Development Corporation which transformed a large area of old rail yards into Chinatown Square.

For decades, Chinatown suffered from a deficit of open space and other recreational amenities. Along with Ping Tom, Louie advocated for the creation of a substantial new park to serve the community. After the Chicago Park District acquired vacant railroad property that became the first part of Ping Tom Memorial Park in the early 1990s, he helped guide the development of Ping Tom Memorial Park. He was a founding member of the park's advisory council. Louie rallied for the park's expansion and for the construction of its 30,000-square foot field house. Leonard M. Louie participated in the dedication of the Ping Tom Memorial Park Field House in 2012, and was recognized by Mayor Emanuel and other public officials for his long term commitment to the park and his role in the development of the facility. Naming this feature in his honor is a fitting tribute to Louie and his many contributions to Chinatown.
